CONCEPT NOTE

An emergent field in critical studies, Health Humanities arises at the crucial intersection of medical science and the human 'story' of suffering and healing. Psychological perspectives, for instance, explore the cognitive, emotional and social dimensions of illness and care thereby addressing issues of empathy and institutional support in healthcare.

Correspondingly, literary and artistic perspectives recognize that beneath the pulse and precision of medicine lies the intricacy of narrative: of bodies that remember, voices that seek agency, and lives that seek meaning in times of adversity and restoration.

This conference aims to facilitate interdisciplinary engagement between the fields of medicine, psychology, literary and artistic expression, philosophy and cultural studies within the broad framework of Health Humanities. Through this platform, we aim to foster innovative ways of addressing pivotal issues affecting contemporary healthcare systems.

SCOPE OF PRESENTATIONS

The Conference on Health Humanities welcomes not only empirical research but also experience-based, reflective, and creative contributions that explore the human, social, and ethical dimensions of health and healing.

Participants from NGOs, healthcare, education, and community organizations are especially encouraged to share insights drawn from their practice and field experiences.

FORMS OF PRESENTATION

Case Studies or Field Experiences

Community interventions, mental health initiatives, or wellness programs that highlight innovative or compassionate approaches to care.

Reflective Accounts

Perspectives from healthcare providers, counsellors, educators, or caregivers on empathy, ethics, resilience, or professional burnout.

Conceptual or Theoretical Papers

Discussions on the role of culture, media, technology, or society in shaping health and well-being.

Narrative or Creative Works

Patient or caregiver stories, short films, digital narratives, or art-based healing projects illustrating human experiences of illness and recovery.

Documentation of NGO Work

Descriptions of ongoing projects or community models integrating psychological, social, or ethical aspects of healthcare.

* The emphasis is on sharing meaningful experiences and ideas that connect health with humanity - beyond data, into stories that inspire understanding, compassion, and change.
